

The results of the Ripple survey show that 85% of Countries in the World expect their crypto to be accepted over the next four years.

Latest Cryptocurrency News - Ripple conducted a survey involving more than 1,600 business participants in 22 countries, asking for their opinions on central bank digital currencies (CBDCs). Those surveyed were divided into two equal groups, one representing financial institutions and the other group representing non-financial businesses making cross-border payments. The survey suggests that the overwhelming majority of respondents agree that widespread adoption of central bank digital currencies is on the way. In addition, 85% said they believe digital currencies will be adopted in their country over the next four years. More than 40% of respondents believe that national digital currencies will have a significant impact on business, finance, and society. Forty-two percent of financial professionals taking part in the survey considered the national digital currency as an innovation booster. In the end, more inclusion, more equity, new opportunities, new efficiencies, and improved competitiveness were identified as potential outcomes. Source: www.dailyhodl.com Latest Cryptocurrency News