ECB meeting day today and EUR and talks about ECB actions will dominate the markets. No one is expecting much from today's ECB in regards the rate decision and most probably it will keep monetary policies unchanged. Nonetheless, the press conference later on must be closely monitor for any new comments or hints. In the past ECB officials suggested that the central bank will adopt a wait and see stance to see how the stimulus feeds through to the economy. Nonetheless when those comments where made the oil levels were different and China economy forecast better. For sure Draghi will comment the inflation expectations with the current oil prices and maybe the possibility of further stimulus. Yesterday the BOC kept the overnight rate unchanged at 0.5%. The comments that the current stance of monetary policy is appropriate and the acknowledgement of the fact that the oil prices is a setback for the Canadian economy moved the CAD. Furthermore the BoC is projecting that the economy will grow by 1.25% in 2016 and 2.25% in 2017 therefore the USDCAD is now at 1.4490 area prior the 1.4690 high before the meeting. Elsewhere we had the MI Inflation Expectations 3.6% and HIA New Home Sales m/m -2.7% from Australia. The RICS House Price Balance 50% from UK and from Japan the All Industries Activity m/m at -1.0%.
