How we can understand these claims are correct or fake?

To find a profitable you need to analyze various statistics such as maximum loss drawdown, profit ratios and the risk-to-reward ratio just on real account and live performance.

It is false idea if you think that with expert advisor you will not lose your forex trading account you can lose all of your money even with a robot that displays good statistics.

If you look at most famous profitable expert advisor, you will see that after a period of time they become unprofitable because market don't move on specify rules check mql championship website:

You can see in expert advisors war a lot of expert advisors lose their account.

Is EA back test calculable?

To answer this question, I can show you the simple way

First open a real account

then run your EA on your desire symbol and wait for a week (minimum)

then go to strategy tester in your Meta Trader software and back test previous week with same setting and same time frame the back test result should be the same as your real forward test with a little difference because on real account we have slippage too if the result was not same you can't count on your expert advisor back test.
